Progressive Farmer First To Sign District Contract

By BARRINGTON KING
ONE of the first Alabama farmers to sign a cooperative agreement in the soil conservation districts program was J. C. Bailey, who owns a 100-acre farm near Wadley in Chambers County.

After special planning meetings three soil conservation districts have been set up covering 32,000 acres and conservation plans have been mapped for 156 farms. In these districts farmers will be given aid in planning a coordinated drainage system for the entire area.

The ups and downs that Bailey has experienced on his farm since 1920 are typical of the experiences of the average Alabama farmer during that period. After the World War he came back from overseas in 1919 and arrived too late to make a crop that year. He started farming in 1920 from scratch, as a one-horse farmer without equipment and living in a log cabin.

With high hopes of 50-cent cotton Bailey put everything he had into a big crop but instead of 50-cents, cotton dropped and Bailey dropped with it. In 1923 he borrowed $800 and laid the foundation for a long, steady build toward independence.

By hard work and good management Bailey and his wife have greatly improved the appearance of the farm, having replaced the log cabin with a neat new house. Much of his land which was formerly in cotton is today in lespedeza. Four strapping boys help with the farm work, while a fifth, Jack, is a freshman at Auburn.

He has made a good beginning with livestock and has five mules and a mare, 15 cows, two brood sows and 125 hens.

Fighting erosion and trying to make a living at the same time has been a full time job on the farm and Bailey hasn't got erosion licked yet. But when the Piedmont Soil Conservation District was organized, he didn't lose any time making application to the district supervisors for help in conserving the soil on his farm. That's how he happened to be the first cooperator in Alabama's first district.

As is the case with most farmers, any plan worked out for the control of erosion on Bailey's farm had to take into consideration what he as a farmer was able to do as well as the needs of his farm as an operating unit. That meant that planning technicians in the Piedmont District, in working out a conservation program for his farm, must fit the program to the farm needs. And that is exactly what farm plans in the district program are designed to do.

His farm requires a lot of feed so the plan provides for corn, small grain, hay and pasture to meet these needs. Bailey will begin his pasture improvement program by clearing up brush and trees on one acre of bottom land which, along with another 4.5 acres of bottomland, will be fertilized, limed, and seeded to common lespedeza, Dutch grass, and White Dutch clover. Forty-five rods of pasture fence will be built, 15 acres of steep and severely eroded land will be retired to trees, and proper woodland management practices will be established on five acres of old woodland.

Only the land best adapted to cultivation will remain in row crops and it will be protected by modern terraces, strip cropping, contour tillage, and systematic rotations which will improve as well as conserve the soil. The steeper, more erodible, and idle land will be converted to perennial hay crops or trees, which will not only protect the land, but provide additional income.

The plan provides for establishing seed patches of crimson and white Dutch clover to provide a source of home-grown seed for winter cover crops and pasture improvement. In 1940, Bailey will plant 15 acres of kudzu and lespedeza sericea in meadow strips, disposal areas, and perennial strips in his cultivated land. He will also plant kudzu on around 3,000 feet of road banks, to prevent the banks from washing.

Spread out over a five-year period, establishment of the new farming program will not be difficult. He has prospects of increasing the carrying capacity of pastures, which may be expected as a result of fertilizing, seeding, and other practices. He is also planning to increase yields of crops through improved rotations, and to increase hay production from meadows and other perennial hay strips, and the seeding of an additional 3.5 acres after carefully preparing the land in advance.

Four Bailey sons, shown above with their father, have an interest in building up the family farm. Standing next to Mr. Bailey is Jack, 19, a student at Auburn; Bob, 17; Bill, 15, a 4-H club member; and Fred, 10.

have had the station at Headland pointing the way in the development of that section's hog and peanut program. In recent months the station announced the results of tests which showed that serious soil depletion follows constant harvesting of peanuts. On the other hand, similar tests proved that when peanuts were "hogged off" the soil was not damaged.

In Baldwin County the Experiment Station, State Department of Agriculture and Extension Service have been cooperating in seed promise savings of thousands of dollars to South Alabama farmers. Before these tests were started farmers bought seed from the Midwest which varied in production from 50 to 300 bushels per acre, and the individual farmer did not know whether seed were worth planting until he got ready to dig his crop.

On Sand Mountain, one of the last areas in Alabama to be settled, the station has concentrated on aiding in developing a balanced farm program for the average

Home-Made Rugs

Making home-made rugs is claiming the interest of 550 Walker County home demonstration club members. The rugs are being made from all types of materials, including tow sacks and rags. Some of the members are making hooked rugs, other crochet, woven rugs or the type made on a rug loom.

Discarded dresses, shirts, skirts, blankets, sheets, etc., are being turned into attractive rugs. The popularity of rug-making in Walker County is another evidence of the goal of Alabama farm families in making their homes more attractive.

ALABAMA AAA HANDBOOK

Copies of the Alabama Handbook, the 1940 agricultural conservation program are being distributed to all farmers. Those who have not seen a copy of these regulations which explain how AAA allowances may be earned may get one by enquiring at the office of the county agent.

Goals that are stressed in the program for Alabama this year are soil building, erosion control and the production of food and feed crops for home use.

"We believe that every farmer will find it to his advantage to study this handbook in order that he may earn every possible allowance," says A. W. Jones, state administrative officer of the AAA.

FINE CHICKENS SHOWN

The first exhibition of the poultry held at the Elba High School Vocational building last Friday and Saturday was an eye opener to many who viewed the many chickens. If you did not take the time off to visit the show you missed a treat, that is if you are interested in pretty chickens.

Many did not think there were any fine chickens in this section, but to those who have been keeping in touch with the vocational county it was not any surprise. Vocational workers for several months have been putting forth special efforts to improve the poultry flocks in the county and the fine showing Friday and Saturday is proof that this work is bearing fruit.

The first edition of the Coffee County Vocational Farm and Home News for the current year came off the press last week. A number of the pressmen and much space in this ten-page paper have been given over to poultry and garden. In fact it is a special edition on these two subjects and contains columns after columns of most valuable information.

If you have not already seen one of these papers call for The Clipper office and get a copy. A number have been left here for free distribution, and it is worth your time to get one. The entire vocational staff and personnel in the county who had a part in producing the paper are to be congratulated on the splendid job they have done in disseminating this very helpful news.

County Agent's Column

By HUGH D. SEXTON
County Agent

Dear Coffee County Farmer:

Re: Cotton and Corn Production

The cost of production of farm products has as much to do with profits or losses in farming as the selling price of the product. A number of factors may influence the cost of production, but none of them is as important as the yield per acre. Our Experiment Station has shown that with average seasonal and adequate cultivation nothing will effect the yield per acre on the average farm as much as commercial fertilizer.

We give you below some Extension Station recommendations relative to the production of cotton and corn which we trust will be of benefit to you.

Corn Production

Recommended Varieties: Douthett, Mokey and Whitley. Replenished Fertilizers: If you are planting corn on land this year that was well fertilized with phosphate and potash last year, 150-200 pounds per acre of nitrate of soda will dress the corn with 100-150 pounds of nitrate per acre after planting is all the fertilizer you need. On the other hand, if you are planting corn on land that was not well fertilized with phosphate and potash last year, a sack of 3-8-5 per acre applied at planting time will pay you. You should also side-dress the corn with 100-200 pounds of nitrate per acre 35 or 40 days after planting.

Cotton Production

Recommended Varieties: Cook 344, Cooke's Clewett and Dixie Triumph. If you use seed other than breeders seed it will cost you each year in getting a good cotton stand. This material can be purchased at a lot of trouble we have each year in getting a good cotton stand. This material can be purchased at a lot of trouble we have each year in getting a good cotton stand.

Recommended Fertilizers

Apply 600 pounds of 6-8-4 per acre 10 days before planting or use 600 pounds of 3-8-5 per acre and side-dress with 100 pounds of nitrate of soda (or its equivalent) per acre ten days before planting. This material can be purchased at a lot of trouble we have each year in getting a good cotton stand.

Very truly yours,

HUGH D. SEXTON,
County Agent.

10 COFFEE COUNTY FARMERS EXPERIMENTING WITH KUDZU

An experiment in the wise use of land is being undertaken by ten Coffee County farmers, who are planting kudzu seed in the open field. These farmers expect to save both time and labor by eliminating the seed bed and transplanting stage. They believe, with proper care and cultivation a temporary pasture can be grown in that manner and cows and hogs will be grazing much sooner than by the old method. Much erosion could be hastened by the same method.

Those engaged in the project are E. C. Brooks, Enterprise; Rex Lowery, Troy; R. E. McColough and J. W. Grimes, Elba; L. Lambert, Tennille; M. K. Parrish, W. D. Smith and W. F. Barker, Kingston; and E. B. Smith, Coffee Springs.

A good way to start a Bermuda grass lawn is to apply 25 to 30 pounds of well-rotted manure to each 100 square feet; work it well into soil and add five to 10 pounds of 6-8-4 per 1,000 square feet. Then lay off trenches about one foot apart, fill with cuttings of Bermuda and cover. Pack the dirt well and water thoroughly.

FIRE FAILS TO STOP COOL SPRINGS CLUB MEETING

It takes more than a fire to stop the meeting of the Women's Home Demonstration Club in Cool Springs community, Coffee County. On the meeting date last week Home Agent Mamie B. Matthews and members were seated around a stove in the church of the community holding a meeting, when it was discovered that the building was on fire. The heads of the two cars present brought forth men from the nearby fields to extinguish the flames. The firemen's efforts helped all they could in getting water to the scene.

After the excitement was over and only the roof was damaged, the ladies sat peacefully on the church lawn to continue their study of color, gardens and poultry.

Franklin County farmers are improving 2,000 acres of pasture annually through phosphate and lime and correct seedling. More than 25,000 acres have been improved in recent years.
